A Vote for Neither

The Washington Post does not have a candidate in this campaign. Neither man running has established a claim to the office that we find compelling.

All things being equal, we would like to support Michael Dukakis. We do not think Dan Quayle is the man of Democratic choice for vice president.

Even so, if these were the only considerations for us, the Dukakis candidacy might not have gained much altitude, but it could conceivably at least have taken off.

subsequent knowledge he approves. He has similar retroactive explanations of why he originally approved positions such as the nuclear freeze that he now disavows.

For instance, he now accepts the proposition that the American land-based missile force must be modernized and made less vulnerable to attack.

George Bush is not without his defects in this area. He is associated with and has participated in some king-sized foreign policy mistakes.

Finally, on what are for The Post the core, nonnegotiable issues — the elimination of the vestiges and effects of racial injustice and the pursuit of economic equity.

Put the Buggy Embassy to Use

The new U.S. Embassy building in Moscow is uninhabitable as a place for confidential business. The fault lies mainly with a sneaky KGB but partly, too, with Nixon-era officials who were seduced by sweet visions of détente and allowed the Soviets to decide how the facility was to be constructed.

Class Politics: A Late Foray Into a Troubling Realm

PARIS — Throughout much of the world, class divisions and the struggle for economic advantage are staples of party politics. But Michael Dukakis and George Bush have relegated the politics of class in America to the final, giddy days of their dispiriting campaign.

Neither candidate seems to be interested in money in the way that Ronald Reagan and many other politicians are interested in money. Taxation of Mr. Reagan's magnificent movie salary propelled him into politics, where he made cutting tax rates a conservative cause.

Mr. Bush's pledge not to raise taxes is qualitatively different from Mr. Reagan's promises on the same subject, and more porous. Counting America's only cohesive mass economic group, Mr. Bush is making a direct appeal to the consuming class.

Mr. Bush has successfully passed the message that his White House would never intervene to take from the working man's paycheck and give to the expanding strata of the unemployed, mostly young, black males in American cities.

On Arms Control, China Follows a Path of Its Own

BEIJING — One might have expected to find at least a semblance of arms control in this region, at a time of U.S.-Soviet progress on arms and with East Asia giving increasing priority to prosperity over the setting of scores.

The Chinese suggest that formal arms control is an overrated process. It is hard for Beijing to determine which weapons might be cut and which confidence-building measures might enhance China's security.

China is the principal supplier of arms and aid to the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia. Beijing's cooperation with the superpowers in enforcing a negotiated settlement of the Cambodian conflict would help prevent the Khmer Rouge from regaining sole power.

The Russians Are Letting the Message Get Through

WASHINGTON — In late September I completed three days of talks with high-level Soviet officials in Moscow on information and cultural relations. I came away with a strong belief that extraordinary changes are occurring in U.S.-Soviet information relations.

Such talks should be a regular and frequent occurrence. And Alexander Yakovlev, the Politburo member, and Valentin Falin, then chairman of the Novosti press agency and now head of the Communist Party Central Committee's international department, told me they agree.

As Mr. Yakovlev noted, "before the 1985 Geneva meeting, the idea of a meeting of this kind would have been inconceivable." A few of the results we achieved: Mr. Falin, who headed the Soviet delegation, presented the accreditation for the first Moscow bureau chief of Voice of America.

A Case, of Sorts, for a President Dukakis

WASHINGTON — Because neither candidate has made a convincing case for himself, this column will undertake to do so for Michael Dukakis. The case for George Bush will come later.

By George F. Will

Consider the case for Mr. Dukakis while you are sitting in a traffic jam on a plane in congested traffic at a congested airport. You are then congealed in a consequence of the Reagan-Bush administration's budget deficits. Whenever an American buys gasoline or an airline ticket, he pays taxes that go into trust funds that can be spent only for highways and airports. But these funds are being hoarded to make the deficit seem to be "only" $155 billion. The deficit is the numerical expression of a cultural tendency and a governmental dereliction of duty. America's tendency is to consume more than it produces. The neglected duty is to husband resources and plan for tomorrow.

Would he do worse on debt? Not likely.

Three-quarters of the debt incurred by the U.S. government in 190 years prior to the Reagan-Bush administration was the result of war. The debt was (as Alexander Hamilton said of Revolutionary War debt) "the price of liberty." The Reagan-Bush debt is the price of profligacy. As for that object of universal political worship — the middle class — Mr. Bush will pardon the expression class — consider this: Four-fifths of Americans are paying a larger portion of their family income in federal income taxes than before Mr. Reagan's presidency. Mr. Dukakis's foreign policy is, of course, improvised incoherence generated by dangerous instincts. For example, he criticizes intervention in the "internal affairs" of Nicaragua, but wants to overthrow the governments of Panama and South Africa. And his campaign conversion to the support of some military modernization is unconvincing. But then Mr. Bush biblically endorses the Strategic Defense Initiative, the MX and Midgetman missiles, the B-1 and Stealth bombers, a 600-ship navy, improved conventional forces and budget restraint. His calculator needs new batteries. The difference between Mr. Dukakis, who may find that some systems are jobs programs with Democratic constituencies, and Mr. Bush, who is unwilling to put tax money where his moving lips are when praising defense, might be small. The next president must restrain American and West European lenders from unleashing a flood of credit to the Soviet Union, a flood that would reduce the pressure on Mr. Gorbachev to choose between militarism and improved living standards. But regarding East-West trade, the Republican Party reveals itself as a party of blinkered businessmen and the crassest commercial values. Democrats might do better. Under Mr. Bush or Mr. Dukakis, foreign policy for the next few years will be largely a matter of watching while Mikhail Gorbachev defines himself. A Dukakis administration would at least speed that process of definition by offering a strong temptation to Mr. Gorbachev to continue the Soviet drive for politically decisive military superiority. That is not much to say for Mr. Dukakis, but it is the most I can manage.

A Double Dress Standard Dictators Out of Uniform

Regarding "The First Lady's Flub-Ducks" (Oct. 21) by William Safire: I can't for the life of me see why it should be wrong for Nancy Reagan to wear designer clothes, whether borrowed, received as a gift, or paid for. She couldn't do any better for the fashion trade and for the country's image. I wish European women in high positions would do the same. It would be so much more entertaining on television. The same American media that are condemning Mrs. Reagan can't seem to do enough to praise Raisa Gorbachev for being so "elegant." Leaders, Not Buddies

After the latest presidential debate, the "political experts" announced that George Bush had wiped the floor with Michael Dukakis, not so much because of what was said, but because the governor appeared less likable than the vice president. Had Europeans used likability as the chief criterion for choosing their post-war leaders, we would not have had Konrad Adenauer, Charles de Gaulle, Olaf Palme, Helmut Schmidt or François Mitterrand — sourpusses all!

Don't Forget Roseanne

By Barbara T. Roessner

HARTFORD, Connecticut — Against the backdrop of a campaign that has seen women's issues not just relegated to a back burner but taken off the stove, "Roseanne" is a grease fire — shooting flames and billowing smoke, a conflagration both sudden and stubborn. "I put in eight hours a day at the factory. And then I come home and put in another eight hours," Roseanne, tired action, the equal rights amendment — as the creation of some elitist feminists who have nothing better to do than ruminate on the real and imagined transgressions of a sexist society. Phyllis Schlafly, for ooo, recently helped turn the Senate against parental leave legislation by branding it a "yuppie bill." But here again, Roseanne might have a thing or two to say. Abortion rights, job protection, decent wages — to a vast majority of women these are not the stuff of abstract ideology or political slogans. They are real, immediate, critical issues with a direct impact on their lives and on the lives of their children. They represent the dividing line between making it and not making it. To women like Roseanne, these are issues of survival. And so, in this very depressing election year, we have the very depressing specter of America's political leaders living in a dream world and a television character living in the real one. Much has been made in recent weeks of just where the women's vote will go Nov. 8. Female voters are expected to outnumber male voters by about 10 million, but women have so far displayed no deep loyalty to either candidate. Just a few months ago, polls showed women favoring Governor Dukakis by an overwhelming margin. But this gender gap has disappeared. Apparently women, like any other voting group, don't enjoy being ignored. And while many women seem to have defected to Vice President Bush by default, polls suggest his "gentler, kinder nation" and relentless baby-kissing are not going to be enough to keep them. If the women's vote is still up for grabs, and if either candidate has a genuine interest in it, he is going to have to take stock of reality — the hard harsh reality so many women face each day. Both candidates could start by taking time out to spend an evening in Roseanne's kitchen. They might be surprised at what's cooking.

Few Britons Raise an Outcry On Curbs for Press and Trials

By Craig R. Whitney
New York Times Service

LONDON — Proposals by the government to limit freedom of the press and restrict the right of criminal defendants to remain silent have brought little public outcry in Britain, although the government may yet face opposition. The British Constitution is unwritten, being instead an accumulation of convention and precedent. Unlike the U.S. Constitution, it has no provision forbidding laws that abridge the freedom of speech or the press and no guarantee that those accused of a crime cannot be compelled to testify against themselves. And so a government with a comfortable majority in Parliament, like that of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, has more freedom to legislate far-reaching social and legal changes than any U.S. president, even one with a majority in the House and the Senate and allies on the Supreme Court. By an administrative notice last month, the government prohibited radio and television stations from broadcasting live or recorded interviews with members or supporters of the outlawed Irish Republican Army and its legal political organization in Northern Ireland. By legislation to be introduced in the House of Commons before Dec. 25, it plans to allow judges in all criminal cases in Northern Ireland — not just in trials of those accused of terrorist acts — to count the silence of defendants against them if they refuse to make statements to the courts or to the police. And by early next year, the government intends to have in place a new law, replacing Section 2 of the Official Secrets Act of 1911, that will make it a criminal offense for members or former members of the security and intelligence services to make any unauthorized disclosure about their work. The same legislation would prevent any news organization from publishing such information, according to most readings of the government's plans, which were disclosed in a government report in June. While the government may have to fight for its plans in Parliament, there has been little public protest. "We do not have a tradition of a vigilant free press," said Richard Shepherd, a Conservative member of Parliament. He plans to be among those fighting against the official secrets bill. The government says that its measures regarding Northern Ireland were prompted by what it calls abuses of freedom by members of the IRA. Spokesmen for the IRA say they are exercising the civil rights available to any British citizen. Predicting several defections from the Conservative side, Mr. Shepherd said: "It's a major constitutional measure, and it'll be the most difficult piece of legislation of this term. No American Congress — no Canadian or Australian parliament — would enact a law that would confer such powers in the hands of the executive. I assert that we, the people, have primacy, but every executive always contends for everything it can get, and because our Constitution is unwritten, each generation has to claim the right again."

Briton Convicted for Sale to Soviets

The Associated Press

KONGSBERG, Norway — A British citizen was convicted here Wednesday on charges connected to the sale of sensitive technology to the Soviet Union that helped the Soviet Navy muffle its submarines.

A Kongsberg town court told the man, Bernard John Green, that it would refrain from sentencing him during a period of two years, in effect putting him on probation for that time. He was convicted for his role in arranging the sale of the equipment in conjunction with the Japanese Toshiba Machine Co., a subsidiary of the electronics company Toshiba Corp. Mr. Green, who has lived in Norway since 1975, was a sales manager for the state-owned Kongsberg 9Aapenfabrikk arms factory when it negotiated with Toshiba and the Soviets to sell machine tools for cutting submarine propellers. He was charged with falsifying information on the application for an export license in order to hide the capability of the equipment, which was sold to the Soviets from 1982 to 1985. The Norwegian computer software steered Japanese-built milling machinery with a nine-ax capacity. Western trade regulations limit such machinery sold to Soviet bloc countries to two axes with simultaneous control. With the sophisticated machine tools, the Soviets developed a propeller blade that was quieter and more difficult for Western submarine hunters to detect. Norway is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and of the Paris-based Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls, which regulates trade with the Soviet bloc. Mr. Green acknowledged last year that he knew the sale violated COCOM rules, but he said the

Asteroid Collision Theories Get New Backing

By Walter Sullivan
New York Times Service

CATASTROPHIC collisions with asteroids and comets have played a major role on Earth in shaping geology, climate and the evolution of life, a growing number of scientists assert.

10-mile East Kara crater, which is partly under water along the coast of the Kara Sea in the Soviet Union. Another crater, about 50 miles wide, was discovered in the Pamir Mountains of the Soviet Union, near the Chinese border. Scientists have also found evidence of a huge collision 34 million years ago about 100 miles off the coast of New Jersey.

the University of California. Ever since it was discovered in the 1950s that the magnetic field of the Earth reverses its polarity at seemingly irregular intervals, scientists have sought to explain why.

One of these collisions, 14.8 million years ago, created the Ries Crater in West Germany, throwing a rain of tektites across central Europe, especially Czechoslovakia. Dr. Müller and Dr. Morris noted that debris falling back into the crater was imprinted with magnetism that is the opposite of today's polarization.

The ice caps grow larger at both poles, trapping much of the world's water and reducing the amount of water at the equator. This shift in the Earth's mass toward its axis causes the Earth's solid mantle and crust to rotate more rapidly than the molten core, much as a spinning skater speeds up by drawing arms close to the body. The rapid rotation disrupts the molten currents in the core, largely eliminating the Earth's magnetism.

The core and the overlying mantle eventually reach an equilibrium speed, allowing the material in the core to develop a new pattern of currents that again generates a magnetic field. Sometimes electrons in the core move in essentially the same patterns as before the impact, generating a magnetic field of the same polarity. At other times, some theorists say, the electrons can move in an opposite pattern, producing a magnetic field of reversed polarity. Today's north magnetic pole, for example, could shift to the southern hemisphere.

Scientists List Climate Research Goals

STOCKHOLM — In the time that global climate change has gone from science fiction to front-page predictions, man's attempt to understand it has been limited to the human equivalent of taking one's temperature.

Oil Price Movements Cut Neste's Profit 34% in Period

HELSENKI — Neste Oy, the Finnish state-controlled oil group, said Wednesday that pretax profit in the first eight months of the year fell 34 percent, to 742 million marks ($175.5 million), due to fluctuations in the price of oil and inventory losses.
Neste posted profit before reserves, taxes and minority interests of 995.2 million marks in the first eight months of 1987.

refineries had been around 1987 levels and Neste forecast that the total for 1988 would be 10.3 million tons.
Net sales for the oil refining division were 5.08 billion marks, or about 9 percent less in financial terms and 4 percent lower in volume than in the same period last year.
Net sales in the trading and supply division were 7.65 billion marks, or 11 percent less than a year ago, mainly because of price fluctuations, Neste said.

Would-Be Leveraged Buyout Artists in Europe Face a Host of Obstacles

Nabisco Seeking New Bids

NEW YORK — The directors of RJR Nabisco Inc. moved to open up the bidding for the giant consumer products company on Wednesday by saying they were interested in reviewing new acquisition proposals.
The announcement came more than a week after Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. launched a $20.3 billion tender offer for Nabisco. The New York buyout firm said it would pay $90 a share for the company.

Two weeks ago, the chief executive of Nabisco, F. Ross Johnson, and Shearson Lehman said they were considering a 375-a-share, $17 billion deal to take the company private.

He expected that the state-owned companies would follow the wishes of the government.
The banking committee of the Banque de France approved Marceau's application to increase its stake above 10 percent in the bank on Friday. Further approval is needed to go above the 20-percent, 33-percent and 50-percent levels.

Among investors who paid a premium to take a portion of the 20-percent core shareholding at the time of Société Générale's privatization were: CGE, Rhône-Poulenc, Générale des Eaux, Assurances Nationales and Union des Assurances de Paris.
Mr. Daehler said that if the nationalized companies declined to convert the bonds and warrants, to which they earlier subscribed, in to shares, the dilution effect might not rise above 15 percent.

The core shareholding, which has since expanded to around 30 percent, also includes Marceau; Meiji Mutual Life Insurance of Japan; Commercial Union of Britain; and the Italian insurance company, Generali.
Still, Mr. Vienot appeared self-assured, noting that the rest of the bonds and warrants had been placed in friendly hands.

Firms Vie for New U.K. Mobile Phone Network

LONDON—Several major electronics concerns are competing for licenses to operate a new mobile phone network that is to begin service in Britain next year. Between two and four companies will be chosen out of 11 groups that applied for licenses to operate the world's first "teletop" digital cordless phone network before Oct. 21. A government decision is expected by the end of the year. The network will enable users of digital cordless phones, which work by radio, to link into national and local telephone networks through devices known as teletops. Teletops will be located in such places as train stations, shopping centers and garages. The teletop telephones and the cost of using them will be cheaper than the costs of cellular telephones. But teletop users can only place, not receive, calls, and must be within range of a teletop. Users will need a paging device in order to receive messages on teletop. By contrast, cellular phones, which have much more powerful—and costly—radios, can operate at much greater distances. Ferranti International Signal PLC, seen as a pioneer of teletop and one of the bidders, hopes to create a sizable new business, its chairman, Sir Derek Alun-Jones, said. The Oct. 26 flotation of Rascal Electronics PLC's cellular phone business, Rascal Telecom PLC, has heightened awareness of the growth potential that mobile phones represent. Mr. Alun-Jones said that he expected cash flows from teletops to be "quite exciting."

South Africa Increases Interest Rate to 14.5%

JOHANNESBURG—South Africa's central bank announced Wednesday that it was raising a key interest rate 2 1/2 percentage points to prop up the nation's currency and halt preholiday credit bidding. The increase in the discount rate, to 14 1/2 percent from 12 1/2 percent, was effective Thursday, and likely will signal higher rates on a variety of consumer and commercial loans. Economists and business leaders, worried about the near-record lows in the value of the rand against foreign currencies, had been urging the Reserve Bank to increase interest rates. However, the rise of 2 percentage points came as a surprise to many. The country's largest manufacturing group, the Federated Chamber of Industries, said the rise was necessary for economic stability, but it was concerned about the extent of the increase. The chamber has said economic adjustments should be made gradually, to minimize negative perceptions and economic distortions. The government has been urging consumers not to go pre-Christmas shopping spree on credit. In September, large surcharges were added to a range of imported goods, from spices to televisions, to discourage spending that would deplete the country's foreign exchange. Many consumers rushed to the stores and bought up as many imported goods as they could on credit, to beat the surcharges. The rand has depreciated 29 percent against the U.S. dollar this year, 20 percent against the yen and 13 percent against the Deutsche mark. On Tuesday the rand hit a 10-month low of 2.5058 against the dollar.

U.S. Accusation Prompts Rise in Asian Currencies

TAIPEI — The Taiwan dollar and the South Korean won advanced after the U.S. dollar Wednesday, continuing an advance begun after the United States accused the two major East Asian exporters of artificially depressing the value of their currencies.
The Taiwan dollar rose four cents to 28.14 per U.S. dollar Wednesday, but the pace of its appreciation had slowed amid reports of heavy central bank intervention to stem the currency's rise.
The currency has jumped 61 cents since last week, when the U.S. Treasury charged Taiwan and South Korea with "pursuing exchange rate policies which prevent effective balance of payments adjustments and provide an unfair competitive advantage."

Saudis' OPEC Cure Unlikely to Last

Newly Packaged U.S. Junk Bonds Begin to Attract Japanese Investors

TOKYO — Junk bonds, once shunned by cautious Japanese investors, are finding new life in Japan packaged in funds that reduce the potential for losses and open the huge investment market in medium-sized U.S. companies, analysts said.
At least five U.S. firms are marketing such high-yield funds or are planning to launch them soon. Each fund is tailored for Japanese investors and seeks to strike a balance between high yields and safety.
U.S. companies' junk bonds are either unrated or rated below investment grade (BBB rating). Most carry coupons some four points above those of top-rated corporate bonds.

Some of the strongest buyers of the high-yield funds so far have been Japanese insurance companies. They are allowed to pay dividends only from income, not capital gains, and are attracted to investments that offer a high coupon in return for capital risk.
Japanese leasing companies also have been aggressive buyers because of their large dollar assets and familiarity with the U.S. credit system, analysts said. They noted that the recent downturn in the dollar is expected to have a significant impact on junk bond sales.
Japanese companies that do invest in the funds are usually more willing to take risks. Ms. Wong said. The high returns justify a cushion against exchange-rate losses.

COPPER: Prices Surge to Record

In recent years, copper prices were relatively low and supplies more than ample, two factors that discouraged holding and financing of inventories.
One year ago, for example, the spot Comex copper delivery traded at about 75 cents a pound, or half the present price.
During the period of rampant inflation in 1979-80, the cash price of copper in New York traded as high as $1.35 a pound. But for most of the period since 1981, copper prices have traded between 55 and 80 cents.

WHAT are the big changes that Americans discuss in 1988? Well, the most short-term among them talk about the coming elections, and the big political changes that the end of the Reagan era may bring. Others, with a longer or at least a different perspective, discuss the greenhouse effect and holes in the ozone layer, and the big environmental changes that may be coming. Still others ponder the evolving relations between the two sexes and the 20 or 30 ethnic groups that inhabit the United States, and they talk about social change.

Almost no one talks about robots — except maybe as something funny from a movie. And yet robots and the technological changes they will bring with them are likely to affect the future more than politics, sociology, and environmentalism combined.

Two new books illustrate, in very different ways, the vastness of the coming change. One is by a scientist, Hans Moravec of Carnegie Mellon University. His book, "Mind Children: The Future of Robot and Human Intelligence," is downright sensational. In fact, I would guess it to be the most lurid book ever published by Harvard University Press.

Here is what Moravec believes. First, robots will soon be able to do everything humans beings do, only better. ("Soon" to a scientist doesn't mean next week. He's talking about within 50 years.) Second, that they will go on to do many things we can't do. Third, that they will take over first Earth and then the universe. "We humans will benefit for a time from their labors, but sooner or later, like natural children, they will seek their own fortunes while we, their aged parents, silently fade away." Fourth, that only sentimental fools will try to resist this change.

since the robots will be so self-evidently superior. And fifth, that we couldn't resist anyway. Even genetic engineering, even if we were prepared to try it on the whole race, would get us nowhere. "A genetically engineered superhuman would be just a second-rate kind of robot."

Since none of these things has happened yet, it may seem easy to dismiss Moravec's yet another mad scientist. That's where the other book comes in. Frederik Schodt is a Japanese-speaking journalist who specializes in business affairs. No wild-eyed science here. "Inside the Robot Kingdom" is mainly a sober account of Japanese robots as they exist in 1988. Schodt wouldn't dream of picturing robots in space ships taking over the universe; his concern is their effect on business profitability right now. And the striking thing is that he nevertheless supports Moravec's position and notably the claim that robots are gaining fast on every human ability.

Consider some of the events occurring in Japan right now. There are factories like Fano and Star Micronics, where robots can and do work completely free of human supervision. "We used to have somebody here monitoring the place at night," says a Fano manager, "but now we just let it run by itself, unmanned."

Japanese robots have also moved out of the factory and onto building sites. They do not yet make good carpenters, but they're great with concrete. The Kajima Corp. has just built one "that can do the work of three plasterers with higher accuracy and quality." That doesn't mean there won't be human plasterers for years to come. But as miniaturization continues, there will be many kinds of work that only robots can do. Why? Because, as Schodt puts it, humans are "walking fifth factories, constantly spewing out hair, particles of skin, and moisture wherever they move, thus contaminating the manufacturing process."

It is a far cry, of course, from robot plasterers under human supervision to robots that rule the universe and don't even find the remaining humans worth supervising. Are you skeptical? Be that. But remember also one of Moravec's historical facts. Over the last 40 years the power of computers has increased by a factor of one million, while the power of human beings has remained constant. A computer, of course, is a robot's brain. When the next millionfold increase has occurred, skepticism may come a little harder.

Noel Perrin wrote the entry "Human Impacts" in the new "Encyclopedia of Robotics." He teaches at Dartmouth College. He wrote this for The Washington Post.

THE funniest deal in the World Team Olympiad, which ended Oct. 22 in Venice, was perhaps the one shown in the accompanying diagram. It was played in the quarterfinal match between India and Greece, and everyone was amused except the Greeks. The North player for India, Rajesh Datta, intended his two-diamond bid to be natural. That would have been the case if the one-diamond bid had been artificial, or possibly short, but it was natural. In that case the cue-bid was supposed to show at least five cards in each black suit. So Rajesh was confused about the partnership agreement, and the partnership was en route to a possible disaster. South was the Indian star Jaggy Shivdasani, and he leaped to four spades in the belief that the dummy would produce a wealth of black cards.

That proved to be untrue, but by their happiness four spades appeared on the table after the lead of the heart ten. North felt pleased about his contribution, but the other players were in shock. It was clear that the Indian team had had a colossal slice of luck. The defenders were shocked into some misdefense, and Jaggy took full advantage. He ducked in dummy, and when East won with the queen, he should have returned that suit. Instead, he led a trump and West won with the ace. Again it was right to lead a heart, but West returned a spade with the idea of stopping ruffs. South ran this to his jack and led the diamond queen. This was covered with the king and ace, and a diamond was ruffed. Dummy was entered with a heart lead, and another diamond was ruffed with South's last trump. He ruffed a heart, drew the missing trump and scored two established diamond tricks to make his game. At other tables, few North-Souths discovered that they had a spade fit. India gained 7 imps.

Neither side was vulnerable. The bidding: South West North East Pass 1 0 2 0 Pass 4 4 Pass Pass Pass West led the heart ten.

An Unlikely Abbess in Serbia

By Henry Kamm

New York Times Service

GRADAC, Yugoslavia — "This reminds me of my riding country," said the tall, stern Englishwoman, looking over the verdant mountains and dunes of this remote corner of southern Serbia, miles from the nearest paved road. "I grew up among horses."

Mother Maria, pictured with Archimandrite Julijan, will be abbess of a restored monastery.

For the English nun, who says she is "past 50," the "thing" probably means that she will spend years, perhaps all her life, on an isolated mountainside here. She will be functioning in Serbian, a language that she has mastered but that is not her own, and performing chores of housekeeping and gardening, although Bristol University degrees in theology and philology prepared her for less menial tasks.

Whether she would take on the task, and she replied, "My heart is not totally closed to it." Within two days, she said, word was out that she had accepted, and "I was stuck."

The Duke and Duchess of York escaped injury when a steel cable snapped above their heads as they waved good-bye at Fremantle Harbor in Perth, Australia. Prince Andrew was preparing to set sail on the HMS Edinburgh when the steel mooring cable lashed whip-like above his wife, and the former Sarah Ferguson, who was standing on a wharf. The cable then struck the side of the destroyer a few feet from where the prince was standing on the destroyer's lower deck.
